

Mircea Eliade

The Sacred and the Profane. The Nature of Religion.

New York: Harper (TB), 1961. [Introduction: Saint-Cloud, April 1956]

Summary

9 Introduction

11 When the Sacred Manifests itself

14 Two Modes of Being in the World

17 The Sacred and History

I.

20 Sacred Space and Making the World Sacred

(1-9)

20 Homogeneity of Space and Hierophany

24 Theophanies and Signs

29 Chaos and Cosmos

32 Consecration of a Place = Repetition of the Cosmogony

36 The Center of the World

42 "Our World" always Situated at the Center

47 City - Cosmos

50 Undertaking the Creation of the World

54 Cosmogony and Building Sacrifice

58 Temple, Basilica, Cathedral

62 Some Conclusions

II.

Sacred Time and Myths

(10-19)

68 Profane Duration and Sacred Time

73 Templum - Tempus

77 Annual Repetition of the Creation

80 Regeneration through Return to the Time of Origins

85 Festival Time and the Structure of Festivals

91 Periodically Becoming Contemporary with the Gods

95 Myth = Paradigmatic Model

104 Sacred History, History, Historicism

III.

116 The Sacredness of Nature and Cosmic Religion

(20-27)

118 The Celestial Sacred and the Uranian Gods

121 The Remote God

128 Perenniality of Celestial Symbols

129 Structure of Aquatic Symbolism

132 Paradigmatic History of Baptism

136 Universality of Symbols

138 Terra Mater

141 Humi Positio: Laying the Infant on the Ground

- 144 Woman, Earth, and Fecundity
147 Symbolism of the Cosmic Tree and of Vegetation Cults
151 Desacralization of Nature
155 Other Cosmic Hierophanies

Human Existence and Sanctified Life

- 162 Existence Open to the World
172 Body - House - Cosmos
179 Passing through the Narrow Gate
184 Rites of Passage
188 Phenomenology of Initiation
192 Men's Societies and Women's Societies
195 Death and Initiation
195 "Second Birth" and Spiritual Generation
201 Sacred and Profane in the Modern World

Chronological Survey: The "History of Religion" as a Branch of Knowledge 216 - 232

Bibliography 234 - 243

Index 244 - 256

IV.
(28-36)